Tori Spelling, the 43-year-old actress and mother of four, put on her party planning hat for daughter Stella McDermott's eighth birthday party on Saturday in Los Angeles.

The entire McDermott family attended the Japanese and Kawaii themed fete, which is often better known as the quality of cuteness in context to Japanese culture.

With pastels galore and cartoon Geisha dolls everywhere, the children indulged their sweet tooth with cake and piñata-filled goodies.

Picture Perfect: The family of six pose for a photo in celebration of daughter Stella turning eight years old.

Mama Spelling went all-out, matching her daughter's bubble gum pink highlights and traditional Geisha-inspired robe.

Even though both wore floral, Tori opted for a more muted, earth-toned palette, while Stella chose electric blue with pale pink accessories and platform shoes.

Tori swept her hair back from her face with a braided headband and Stella showed off her razor sharp bangs with chopsticks in a bun.

While some appeared to stay away from the line of fire, Stella's younger sister Hattie Margaret McDermott, thought the party was a hit enjoying the giant piñata.

Hattie joined in on the theme wearing a pastel two-piece set.

The McDermott males on the other hand decided to keep it casual.

Aside from being a self-proclaimed 'DIY party planning mama' as she likes to call herself, Tori and her husband are in hot water according to People. They reportedly owe $259,000 in taxes to the state of California.

However, this is not the first financial obstacle that the couple have encountered.

Earlier this year in January, Tori is being sued by American Express for an outstanding balance on her credit card of almost $38,000 that remains unpaid since last summer.
